

SALOONKEEPER ASKS MANY REFORMS IN SALOONS

When the Liquor Dealers' Protective ass'n holds its next meeting a "reformed saloonkeeper" will appear and demand that the saloons of Chicago be enlisted in the uplift movement.

Chas. Domke, proprietor of a bar at 58 W. Randolph st., says that he will drop out of the association if it refuses to give its moral support to his campaign.

Domke wants the saloonkeepers to obey the laws and not to stay open after 1 o'clock, not to sell liquor to minors or drunkards, keep unescorted women from their places, and to stop gambling and catering to the criminal element.

He will also urge the association to seek the repeal of the special bar permit ordinance which allows saloons to sell liquor till 3 o'clock.

SCHUETTLE RAPS LEWIS

A non-suit was taken by Roman G. Lewis, ass't city prosecutor, who "prosecuted" the case of Edmund Wolta, a druggist oled at 1501 W. 1 2th st., yesterday.

Wolta was charged with selling 50 cents worth of morphine to a man for $2. Lewis said he did this because of his great sympathy for the sufferer.

Detective Sergeant Well complained to Second Deputy Schuettler about the delision.

"That looks like sympathy doesn't it," said Schuettler. "If Judge Trude granted a non-suit in this case it shows that he was ignorant of the facts in the case."

At present the judge and Lewis are "passing the buck."

FARSONS AGAIN ACCUSED

Eight banks of the middle west were discovered yesterday to have filed suit for $73,000 in claims against William and John aFrson, Jr.

They allege the Farsons perpetrated a $425,000 fraud by the sale of railroad and timber bonds which were falsely represented.

The alleged misrepresentations made in the suits are somewhat similar to those on the irrigation scheme for which they were indicted.
